THE BRIBE.

Under the above heading the Saturday Re-

The most indefensible part of Mr. Gladstone's Greenwich proclamation is the offer to buy a majority by the remission of the Income tax: and it is the more necessary that independent critics should remonstrate against a mischievons innovation, because from the special circumstances of the case Mr. Gladstone was able to calculate on immunity from party censure. It might be plausibly argued that, in strict analogy to the law of elections, all his bribery. The erouse that in this case the coneideration will be paid to the voter, even if the hostile candidate succeeds, is met by the evidently concerted statements of Mr. Gladstone's colleagues. Mr. Cardwell, Mr. Goschen, and Mr. Stansfeld assert that the proposed financial change is so complex that it can be safely accomplished by Mr. Gladstong alone. It would therefore appear that the Minister proposes to bribe the electors by a draft which requires his own personal signature. Marlborough was accused by his enamies of prolonging the war with France because he knew himself to be indispensable as General. Mr. Gladstone is represented by his friends as the only financier who can deal with the crisis which he has himself produced. In this case the attempt at corruption is made, not by an ambiguous agent, but by the candidate in person; yet the smallest part of the impropriety consists in the unduo influence which will be exercised over the constituencies. If-it bad been possible that the Minister could parchase votes with funds of which be could legitimately dispose, it might be useless to impeach the questionable bargain; but Mr. Gladstone, as a trustee for the nation, has no right to promote his own political interest at the expense of the public revenue. It has hitherto been a point of honour with every Ohancellor of the Exchequer to keep his financial proposals secret until they are announced at the proper time to the House of Commons. Mr. Gladstone first postpones the Budget by a dissolution, and then for party purposes discloses his intentions two or three months before the proper time. It is true that the continuance or abolition of the Income-tax will not directly affect commercial operations in the same manuer in which modifications of the tariff influence the market: but. in his exclusive concern for the prolongation of his own power. Mr. Gladstone has not remembered that his daring bid for the support of payors of Income-tax renders it necessary also to announce a reduction of customs or excies duties. Accordingly, in direct violation of official precedent. Le announces his intention of giving some marked relief in the class of articles of popular consumption." Every dealer in tea, in sugar, and perhaps in malt, may be compelled during the early spring to regulate his purchases and prices with reference to the boons which are to form a part of the present election bribe. If direct and indirect taxes are reduced by equal amounts, Mr. Gladstone will bave displayed a prodigality in corruption which has not been equalled since the latest days of the Roman Republic. Ten or eleven annual millions will bave been distributed as largesse to the electors, who, as it is hoped, will not reflect that the Midisters liberality is exercised at their own expense. Half of the amount is to be supplied by the anribne with which the Chancellor of the Exohequer had no right to meddle until be asked the assent of the House of Commons to his figureial scheme for the year.
